The HUMOURIST. No. II.

Quis non Inventi Turbâ quod amaret in Illâ.
OVID.

Who is there so stupid, as not to find a favourite Letter in the following Collection.

The HUMOURIST to himself, Greeting.

Charles-Town, Jan. 8, 1753.

SIR,

I AM always happy in the Communication of good News: I can assure you, and that from the best Authority, that you possess an excellent Talent of Humour, ergo thy Humour is excellent. It is some little Satisfaction, when I reflect how near we stand in Affinity together, to find, that you are a Man of Penetration, and can, with surprizing Discernment, see a Church by Day-light: Your aerial Mansion is almost fitted up; a few Days will compleat it, when, inspiring Thought! I shall send you a Billet to drink a Glass of Falernian Wine, and make merry with your Friends. I give slender Entertainments, tho' you will be amply recompensed by an Oration in the true Sublime, by a Man of Parts, in Praise of my Institution; he is so apt a Scholar, that he will couch the minutest Secret in the most artful Terms.

Fail not on your Peril; if thou dost, thou art a Worm and no Man, and deservest to be the Scorn of Men and the Outcast of the People.

speculative Man, I make no Apology for the Freedom I take in desiring your Opinion, and subscribing myself, Dear Fellow,

Thy Friend,
IGNOTUS.

Qu. Of the three Professions, Law, Physic, and Divinity, which is the most desirable, not only in a moral but political Sense.

Ans. Physic: Because the Physician knows himself both inward and outward, and consequently must conform more strictly to that Lesson of the Oracle nosce Teipsum; and he undoubtedly is the most useful in a political View, Adrian the VIth speaks thus, Were it not, says he, for the Physician, Men would live so long, and grow so thick, that one could not live for the other, and he makes the Earth cover all his Faults.

LONDON, September 15.

Extract of a Letter from Rouen, Sept. 6.

"Our deputies are returned hither from court, and a very singular figure they made at their return; the first president's servants wearing cockades in their hats, and himself giving out that they had succeeded in their commission and gained a great victory: The parliament will meet on tuesday, and we shall then know, with some degree of certainty, wherein this victory consists; or not, we shall know it by its consequences, for in all disputes whatever, those are the victors who carry their point.

All [illegible]

[illegible] his Money from the Moths of Prey, [illegible] me on Wednesday last with the Young Man's best Companion, and as an Addition to the Favour wrote his Name on the blank Leaf, adding, that it was a necessary Step in order to give the Book its due Recommendation, and to convince the World in what Estimation it was held by one of his Abilities.

He gave my little Sister two Books handed down from a long Roll of Relations, viz. the History of Gog and Magog the Giants of Guildhall: He made a pithy Speech on the Occasion, acquainting his Family that there was nothing like using young People to read History; by the time I was 10 Years old, say'd he, I had made myself a compleat Master of Jack the Giant-killer, Gog and Magog, and the Circle of the Sciences; Oh! 'tis a fine Thing to be a Scholar! He was reading the Latin Motto of a Book the other Day, and with great Vehemence and Extasy cried out, Oh! 'tis a noble Thing to be well versed in Greek!

These and such like Oddities compose my Grand-father: I beg you will work the old Codger, and reduce him to Rationality. I am with all due Respect, Dear Sir,

Your most obedient Servant,
TOM SPRIGHTLY.

October 1, 1753.

Dear Sir,

I HAVE this Moment received a Letter by the Hands of a Friend from England, wherein he informs me, that he attended some Trials at the Old-Bailey that afforded much Conversation; and after relating some of the Particulars, concludes with the following Paragraph, 'Yesterday the above Malefactors were hang'd at 'Tyburn.'

Qu. By the Humourist. Whether the Prisoners being made up of Men and Women, the latter can, by any reasonable Arguments, be proved to be Male-factors?

Dear Humourist,

IT is to you I address myself for the Solution of the following Question: As you are a chamber of inquest associated them, that the constitution Unigenitus was to be respected and received as a law of the universal church; that the sole right of explaining this resided in his majesty's person; that therefore his majesty could not suffer his orders, signified by his ministers, to be annulled; that the validity of the forms of the arrets of state were not to be questioned; and that his majesty had given directions for what regarded the bishop of Evreux and the curate of Verneuil.

What all this amounts to, vulgar capacities can by no means comprehend; and therefore we are impatient to learn from the parliament's commentary, what they think of the matter."

Extract of a Letter from Rouen, Sept. 9.

"The first president made his report to the parliament on the 3d instant of what had passed at court; upon which a committee was appointed to consider of the report, but so little to the president's satisfaction, that he protested against it, and moved to adjourn, in which he was seconded by M. Boullenger, counsellor of the great chamber. The next morning the 5 chambers met again, when they appointed 8 members of the great chamber, the like number from each of the chambers of inquest, and 2 from each of the chambers of request, to consider the report. The first president opposed it vehemently, but the president de Louvaille, who was with him the day before, spoke and voted for the question, which was carried by a noble majority."

Paris, Sept. 10. It was very much apprehended this week, that some rigorous order would have come from the court to the grand chamber at Pontoise: However, none came; and the magistrates which compose that body, adjourned the 7th 'till Martinmas.

Rouen, Sept. 10. The commissaries who were appointed by the parliament to consider of the king's answer to their deputies, were chosen according to seniority. The 6th inst. when these gentlemen were assembled for that purpose, 12 of the presidents came in, as they had a right to do, and there were some pretty smart debates between them and one of the commissaries, but the subject of them is not exactly known. The same day the parliament received letters patent from the king, forbidding them to break up till they had obeyed his orders.

The next day, which was to be the last of their sittings, all the chambers assembled to hear these letters read, and to take them into consideration. The opinions were divided about the registry of the king's answer to the deputies, and it's said there was but one counsellor who was for its being registred in full. Montesquieu, the premier president, as some others, were for registring it with some reflection, but the majority were for repeating their remonstrances; nevertheless they came to a resolution at last to register the letters patent with proper restrictions.

London, Sept. 22. Our correspondent at Paris assures us, that the court has gained a compleat victory at Rouen; but it was in some measure by surprise, for when the committee met to frame their report, the first president entered unexpectedly, attended by the king's advocate, who brought his weapons in his hand, viz. letters patents and a lettre de cachet, requiring the parliament to continue sitting, which after some debate was registered.

Paris, Sept. 17. The chatelet having published an arret, directing the king's attorney and other officers to have a strict regard to any steps that may be taken to increase the present schism in the church, and to make their report thereupon to the chatelet, in the defence of the parliament, it was deliberated in the council of state whether this collet should not be suppressed of justice left at Paris, the debate was adjourned without any resolution taken.

Paris, a la main, Sept. 28. On monday the king's letters patent were published, for establishing a new chamber of vacations, who are to sit in the convent of the grand Augustins, to judge of civil and criminal affairs, which require to be dispatched during the vacation. And on wednesday this chamber met, and settled the days of sitting, and other matters, which were necessary to be adjusted before entering upon business.

LONDON, Oct. 20.

Extract of a letter from the Hague, dated Oct. 6.

The Marquis de Bonnac, ambassador from France, has engaged in an affair which very much draws the attention of the public. A gentleman of Britany, or one who however calls himself so, and goes by the name of Rochegerault, has published at Amsterdam a little treatise of twenty-seven pages in octavo, under the title of the voice of the persecuted: A canto preceded by a discourse to the protectors of innocence. The persecuted people are, according to this discourse, the protestants of Languedoc, and other places in France. The author is himself a protestant, and has been some time in England. The canto is a kind of poetic enthusiasm, and has nothing in it particular: But the discourse is a sharp declamation against France, wherein the author has been so imprudent as to throw in several shocking episodes, upon which he has made remarks that are still more so, and are entirely foreign to the subject. One of them is upon the new dutchess. M. de Bonnac thought it was his duty to cause this pamphlet to be suppressed, and to that end applied to their high mightinesses, who told him, it did not come under their cognizance, but under that of the states of Holland, or of the council of the deputies in their absence. Whereupon his excellence had recourse to them, who referred him to the grand bailiff of Amsterdam, who caused the copies to be all seized, and afterwards the author himself, who has been ever since confined at the Town-House. The ambassador has received orders from his court to demand that this young man ſhould be delivered up to him; and as the crime he is immediately charged with is not of ſuch a nature as to render him unworthy the protection of the republic, a report has been ſpread, that he has been guilty of ſeveral crimes, and amongſt others that of murder. People are very attentive to ſee what reſolution the ſtates of Holland, or the city of Amſterdam, will take upon this ſubject, which may ſerve for the future as a rule for foreigners, eſpecially proteſtants, who may think themſelves ſecure in taking refuge in the provinces of the republic.'

Frankfort, Oct. 11. We are informed that in the number of important affairs which will be brought upon the carpet when the king of Great-Britain ſhall arrive in the Empire, that of the election of a tenth electorate in favour of the houſe of Heſſe Caſſel will be one of the principal, and that this buſineſs will go hand in hand with that of the election of a king of the Romans.
